Medicare does not currently include coverage for oral health services as a standard benefit. Nearly half of all older Americans and people with disabilities who receive Medicare benefits lack access to the care and resources they need to maintain good oral health. What could a policy change mean for people on Medicare? How might it affect the health care system? To answer these questions and more, The Hill pulled together lawmakers, health experts, and patient advocates to discuss potential changes to Medicare and what that could mean for more integrated and equitable oral health care for millions of Americans. Watch ADHA President Sharlee Burch on the “Future of Medicare and Oral Health” sponsored by CareQuest Institute for Oral Health. See the recording HERE.
